Graphical Abstract

Light of my life: The merger of natural transmembrane proteins with synthetic photoswitches creates hybrid receptors that can be integrated into complex systems and regulated with the precision that only light provides. This strategy allows for the optical control of single cells, neural systems, and can even be used to control animal behavior.

12.1 The Need for Increased Provision of Rehabilitation Worldwide

The World Health Organization has recently highlighted a substantial unmet need for rehabilitation worldwide, with a 2017 Call-to-Action to increase the role of rehabilitation in health care as an essential component of integrated health services [1]. It was acknowledged that there is a profound unmet need for rehabilitation.

This chapter is a component of Part 3: Pillar II.
For an explanation of the grouping of chapters in this book, please see Chapter 1: “The multidisciplinary approach to fragility fractures around the world—an overview”.
